Hi, I am new to the forum and just came across this forum. I have been trying to start this discussion for about a month now and hope that it will not be the last. My idea here is to open a conversation about the following topics: . . • What kind of sex do young children need? • How do we help children develop healthy sexual relationships and responses? • When and how do parents initiate discussions about sex? • What are the cultural and religious views about sex and sexuality that play a role in our parenting today? Is there anything I am missing? I think we need to start thinking about our beliefs, views and opinions about how we are going to raise our children. These questions will help us gain a better understanding of our children and help us raise healthier, more well adjusted children. How do we help children develop healthy sexual relationships and responses? Well, this is a question that is answered by every parent every day. We talk about sex, we talk about it in front of our children, and if we are lucky we continue to have conversations about it later on in our lives with them. The key here is to keep the conversation going and to have open dialogue between ourselves and our children. This is something that I really believe is an essential part of raising healthy children. The first questions that should be asked by the parent is "how are your feelings about sex?" What do we mean by our feelings? How we feel about sex and sex-related issues is not always the same. I do believe that it is possible to be in a negative frame of mind about sex and still have a positive attitude about sex. I am not suggesting that this is easy, but it is something that we should be open to. I want to offer you some of my thoughts and perspectives on how we talk to our children about sex, and how we do this in a safe and healthy manner. I want to challenge you to think about the ways that we are raising our children. I will offer you some of my thoughts on how we can start conversations with our children about sex. One of the first questions that we need to ask ourselves is "how do we want to raise our children?" Who are we raising our children to be? In my opinion, the best way that we can help our children is to raise them to be loving, compassionate, kind, honest, and happy. I believe that if we raise our children in this way, we will have a better chance of raising healthy children

[{"id":"3410","title":"Mama, where is my vagina?","body":"Is it too late to get pregnant and what should I do about it? My boyfriend said my vagina is still there, but I don't see it, and I know I had sex about a month ago, so is it even possible to get pregnant with me at only 3 weeks away from my period?"

Any tips, advice, and help would be appreciated.
