There is, in the case of Gray v. Head, and that was a Criminal Case, an exception to the general rule, which was to the effect that in a Criminal Case, where the answers of the juror would reveal his opinion of the guilt or innocence of the defendant, the defendant's right is to ascertain the answers of the juror in order to exercise his right of challenge before a juror is accepted. See also, State v. Naylor, 105 Utah 153, 141 P.2d 714 (1943). It is our further belief that there should be no question about the right of a convicted defendant to a fair trial, and the court should in no way interfere with the exercise of that right and certainly should not withhold any ruling on the exercise of peremptory challenges until the juror is accepted and the defendant is compelled to use his peremptory challenges before he is finally chosen as the jury. We agree with the trial court that the purpose of Rule 2 was never intended to, and does not, cause a delay and waste of time by forcing the acceptance of an obviously biased juror. We hold, therefore, that the trial court's ruling in this matter was a proper exercise
